Nation Struggles in Grip of April Blizzards, Tornadoes,
Rain and Floods

TEN CHILDREN KILLED

15-Foot Snow-Drifts Today
In Pampa, Texas

(By International News Service)

At least 24 persons were dead today and many others injured or missing as the nation struggled in the grip of April blizzards, tornadoes, rain storms and floods.

Indiana attributed four deaths to the blizzard raging in the area around the capital, as the flood menace mounted, and continued snow, rain and cold was forecast for the week-end.

Thirteen persons, ten of them children, were swept to their death early today as a small creek made into a roaring river by torrential rains washed away a combination home and store building at White Stone, Georgia.

ALICEVILLE, Ala.—Sweeping across Alabama and Mississippi, spring tornadoes today left nine known dead, scores injured, and an untold amount of property damage. As the people dug their way out of debris left in the tornado area, torrential rains brought immediate flood danger to many sections.

Residents of the lowland in Dallas county have been urged to evacuate their homes.

PAMPA, Texas.—A cavalry of trucks and ambulances bucked 15-foot snow-drifts today in a desperate effort to save the lives of seven children marooned over-night in a school bus.

The bus was lost in the snow-banked prairie, somewhere south of Pampa. Sheriff O. T. Lindsey reported.

Dr. J. J. Willaman Speaker At Exchange Club Meeting

Life as we know it can exist only on Venus, Earth and Mars in our solar system, and probably on only a few of the other bodies in the universe, according to a discussion before the Exchange Club last evening by Dr. J. J. Willaman.

Under the title "Where in the universe can life exist," Dr. Willaman discussed the physical and chemical conditions which must obtain before life becomes a possibility. "Proper temperature is the prime limiting factor," he said. By means of a chart he showed the whole known range of temperature. Using a scale of one inch to 200 degrees F., his chart of five feet could only include the range from absolute zero, at which point there is no heat whatsoever, to the 9000 degree F. of the surface of the sun. To include the known temperature of some 800,000,000 degrees in some of the big stars his chart would have had to extend to Lancaster, Pa.

On this chart life is known to exist within only a strip about three-fourths of an inch long, and theoretically it cannot cover more than about five inches. Therefore he speculated that life can exist only on planets. Many stars probably have planets the same as our sun. These planets must not be too small, or they will be too cold like our moon. They must not be too large, or their atmosphere will be too dense. They must not be too near the parent star or they will be too hot, nor too far away lest they be too cold.

The conclusion Dr. Willaman drew from these and other considerations was that life throughout the universe is not a common occurrence. In our own solar system Mercury is too near the sun, Jupiter and the other outer planets are too far from the sun. That leaves the ones nearest the earth, Venus and Mars, where life is possible. It may still not be probable even there.

"Family Dinner" Marks The Anniversary of Trust Co.

A "family dinner" marking the 30th anniversary of The Bristol Trust Company was held in the Travel Club Home last evening. Covers were arranged for about 40. Those attending were the officers, directors, and employees of the company and their wives. Spring flowers formed the table decorations. In welcoming the guests Clifford L. Anderson, president of the company, stated that it was just a "get-together" affair and that there would not be any speeches or formal program.

At the conclusion of the dinner Lester D. Thorne, secretary and treasurer of the company, presented Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, on behalf of the employees, with a very beautiful potted hydrangea, in honor of their wedding anniversary.

Win With Pinchot? Win WHAT?

(The Philadelphia Inquirer, April 3, 1938)

No thinking Republican voter should permit himself to be dragged up a blind alley by the false prophets who are preaching support for Gifford Pinchot on the absurd plea that "Pinchot can win."

Poppy-cock to this effect has been circulated in the political by-ways by the ballyhoo artists of the Pinchot brigade as a means of stirring up "psychological" backing for their candidate. They are trying to induce reluctant Republicans to swallow the bitter Pinchot pill with the sugar-coated argument that it is better to win with Pinchot than not to win at all.

No voter giving this specious line of reasoning a moment's thought could reasonably be swayed by it. On such bald propaganda, however, the Pinchot campaign has been nourished from the start. But the fare has been getting thinner each day, and Judge James in his straight-from-the-shoulder speech in Pittsburgh the other night effectually gave it what should prove to be the finishing touches.

Pinchot, the Party Wrecker, as a champion to lead the Republicans to victory over the Democrats would capture first prize in any what's-wrong-with-this-picture contest. The thought of this hardy perennial creaking his way back to the public trough at the head of a battalion of job-hungry messmates, and trying to make the sortie look like a crusade to advance the Republican cause, would be highly amusing if it were not quite so nauseating.

A Republican falling for the expediency doctrines laddied out by the Pinchot forces is helping neither the Republican Party nor himself. He is only playing into the hands of a man whose itch for power grows with the years; who now seeks a third term as Governor of the State and is trying to sell the Republican Party the idea that he is the only candidate who can win.

"I am sure you, like myself," Arthur James said in an address at Pittsburgh, "are not yet ready to desert the bed and board of Abraham Lincoln and others of our beloved forebears for a mere mess of expediency pottage, served in a Socialistic boarding house with Gifford Pinchot at the head of the table doing the serving, while your table-mates would range in hue from pale pinks to red Reds."

"Win with Pinchot?" Where does that absurdity get to, in face of the fact that it is Pinchot that the Democratic leaders of the State are rooting for in the current campaign? Pinchot is the Democrats' fair-haired boy in this election. He is the man they want to have against them in November—not Arthur James. Pinchot, the Party Wrecker, is a weak candidate, weak on his record, weak in his appeal to the voters, weak on every count. The Democrats, hopeful of four more years at Harrisburg, wouldn't be whooping it up for him if they thought for a minute that "Pinchot can win."

"Win with Pinchot?" Win WHAT with Pinchot, if the unthinkable should happen and he should be permitted to have the State Government in his clutch for a third term?

Would Pinchot's election win a return to Republican principles of government? Would it strike a blow at New Dealism and its destructive doctrines, as practiced so ruinously under the Earle Administration? Would it mean an end to inefficiency, to the spoils system, to politics in government? Would it halt the flight of industry from the State? Would it end business-baiting? Would it bring more jobs, lower taxes, better government for Pennsylvania?

It would not. It would not accomplish a single one of the things so desperately needed by our people if Pennsylvania is to get back upon the high road to prosperity and progress.

It would merely turn the clock back and give us just another Pinchot administration, with the Pinchot clique of chronic office-holders back in power, with the Pinchot policies again in vogue—and with John L. Lewis grinning benevolently from the background.

Pinchot represents everything Pennsylvania needs to get away from. As an opportunist, as an obstructionist, as a politician, Pinchot goes to the head of the class. As an office-seeker whose gun-

15 OFFICERS LOCATED AT OXFORD VALLEY NEW FREE PARKING LOT IS NOW OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

With 17 at Doylestown Make
Total of 32 Motor Police
For Bucks County

NEW SUB-STATION SOON LIGHTS ARE PLACED

Fifteen officers are now located at the Oxford Valley sub-station of Pennsylvania Motor Police. This number with 17 at Doylestown sub-station makes a total of 32 in the county. This number does not include Sergeant William Engle, of Doylestown.

When the new sub-station is opened at Quakertown in the near future, Bucks county will have over forty Pennsylvania Motor Police, nearly three times as many as were ever stationed in the county before.

The total membership of the two county units was increased by the arrival of thirteen officers, twelve of them graduates of the Motor Police Training School at Myerstown, and one a former trooper in the State Police, now a trooper of the Motor Police.

A schedule will soon be placed in operation at both sub-stations, Doylestown and Oxford Valley, whereby the main highways of the county will have a constant 24-hour patrol service with officers working on different shifts.

At the Oxford Valley sub-station, the additional officers who arrived yesterday will be quartered at the sub-station, where an addition was recently built to the house. Extra Doylestown sub-station officers who arrived Friday are quartered in a main street apartment house, while others are in the headquarters in the Eastern building.

All of the new officers out of school have the new uniform. Those officers who do not have the new uniforms, will receive them within a short time so that the dress will be uniform throughout the service.

New officers who arrived in Doylestown yesterday include Privates T. A. Aller, H. E. Shafer, R. R. Beckhart, G. H. Phillips, I. L. Good, K. E. Stumpf and T. H. Cavanaugh. New officers at Oxford Valley include Privates E. J. Kline, T. Wenzel, T. Unger, E. E. Nighan, H. H. Jones and Peter J. Reilly, a former State trooper, well known in Bucks county.

Thugs Get $4,000 Liquor Cargo

Philadelphia, April 8.—Three thugs kidnapped Wilford Melvin, 25, a truck driver, today, and made off with a $4,000 cargo of whiskey he was preparing to move from a North Philadelphia warehouse to State liquor stores. The trio forced the driver to accompany them on a three-hour ride in a sedan, while two companions drove off with the truck and disposed of the liquor. Each time Melvin tried to raise an outcry he was struck by two men sitting on each side of him. The truck later was found abandoned not far from where Melvin was hurled to the street.

James Answers Pinchot (By International News Service)

Huntingdon, April 8.—"The mountain labored and brought forth a mountain." Thus Superior Court Judge Arthur H. James today summed up a reply to charges made by his opponent, Gifford Pinchot, for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. The jurist promised to "pour some of the hot oil of truth on his (Pinchot's) back in a radio talk next Wednesday night."

Addressing a rally here this noon, James declared "Pinchot has at last exposed what he says makes me unworthy to be Governor of Pennsylvania. I am proud after my 64 years of active life, that with a few-tooth comb he is able to rake up so little against me."

"First, he says that I am unfair to labor because I joined with six other members of the superior court in deciding the Romig case. . . . He fails to mention that two of the judges were his appointees."

"Second, he says that I myself have decided the participation by judges as leaders in partisan politics. I still adhere to that stand. But the point has not yet been reached when a member of the bench is denied the right to help the people back to sanity in our public affairs."

"Third, he says that I said in 1930 that I would withdraw from the race for superior court if Senator William S. Vare asked me. In the interests of economy and loyalty to a man who had proven to be my friend, I withdrew in favor of Justice George W. Maxey. Harmony and loyalty are words unknown to Gifford Pinchot, except when they serve his purpose."

"Fourth, he says I have been slinging mud. If slinging his own record at him is slinging mud, then perhaps he is right about this."

The 1938 Primaries

Washington, April 7.
THE REASON the Democratic primaries for Senatorial and Congressional nominations, the first of which will be held next month, are of more than ordinary interest this year is because they directly bear upon control of the national conventions of 1940.

IN THAT, of course, is involved not only the nomination of a Presidential candidate but the framing of a platform, the fixing of the party direction and the selection of an issue. These primaries, perhaps, will not be so nationally significant as the general election in the fall. But, so far as the convention is concerned, they are much more significant. Conventions, national as well as State, are controlled by delegates elected in the primaries. Upon them the general election results have no bearing whatever.

THE fact happens to be that the faction or element which this year dominates the primaries in the different districts and States in all probability will control the primaries in 1940, and that means the delegates from these States to the 1940 national convention. No one knows this better than the practical politicians, both in and out of the Administration, which accounts for the intense concern with which the fight between New Deal and anti-New Deal Democrats are being watched from the White House down.

THAT there are such fights to watch is in itself proof of the shift that has taken place in the political scenery within a relatively short period. Until last year the entire political stage had been set CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, April 8.—All members were present when the Bensalem Township School Board met in regular monthly session at the high school here last evening. Routine business and committee reports consumed most of the meeting time. William Abel, president, presided.

The treasurer's report indicated that collection of taxes this year has fallen short of the same period last year. The report indicated that less than $1,000 has been collected this year, and for the same period last year the amount was approximately $2,500.

Secretary Williams reported to the Board that the sale of the property and machinery of the distillery located at Edlington has been confirmed by the Federal Receiver. The real estate sold for $700, subject to the taxes, and the machinery and equipment brought $8,000. Salvage men were the buyers.

Superintendent of Bensalem schools, S. K. Faust, made the regular nurse's and doctor's reports to the Board. The report revealed several cases of scarlet fever, measles and mumps.

Announcement was also made that the high school will again conduct a Summer school for a period of six weeks. Instructors will be from Temple University. Board members were told that the interscholastic meet to be held May 25th at Quakertown will have Bensalem representatives in attendance.

Commencement will be June 7th, according to the announcement that was made. The baccalaureate services will be held June 5th at the First Baptist Church in Andalusia. The seniors will make their trip to the national capital on June 9th, 10th and 11th.

FOUR BRISTOL MEN AMONG 17 SENTENCED IN CONSPIRACY CASE

Augustine Avella Described
As One of The "Kingspins"
Of The Conspiracy

ONE WOMAN IN CASE

Mrs. Augustine Avella Given
Suspended Sentence of Six Months' Imprisonment

(By International News Service)

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 8.—Four Bristol men, confessed participants in an alcohol conspiracy that deprived the Government of more than $20,000,000 in post-repeal taxes, today were to begin serving prison sentences in a Federal penitentiary.

They were among 17 of the original 91 defendants in the huge plot who drew prison terms totaling 10 years and 10 months and fines of $42,350. Heavier sentences would have been imposed by Federal Judge Albert B. Maris but for the fact that this group of defendants pleaded guilty to their crime or stood mute before the court.

Forty-four other members of the ring, including four women, were placed on probation and in 19 cases were ordered to pay small fines. Leniency was shown in these cases, the court indicated, because the defendants turned State's witnesses and gave testimony which resulted in convictions.

A third group of 18 was acquitted during the prolonged trial in the United States District court here, while 12 others who pleaded not guilty and subsequently were convicted by a jury have appealed for a new trial. Judge Maris will hear argument in the latter cases on April 30 and will immediately pass sentence if the pleas are denied.

Augustine Avella, of Bristol, described as one of the "kingspins" of the conspiracy, drew the heaviest prison term. He was sentenced to two years and was fined $10,000. The other Bristol men who drew prison sentences are:

Bert Avella, one year and a day.
Joseph Genco, Bristol, $2,500 fine and a year and a day.

Mario Ardizzone, Bristol, one year and a day, $2,000 fine.

Winifred Avella, wife of Augustine, Bristol, was given a suspended sentence of six months imprisonment and placed on probation for three years.

Others sentenced included:

Antonio DiStefano, of Bristol, who is now in the Berks County jail under a two year sentence of which he has served fifteen months, a suspended sentence of one year and one day and probation for three years.

William Leach, of Newtown, Bucks County, a suspended sentence of six months and probation for one year.

Alesio Lanza, of Bristol, a suspended sentence of three months, $500 fine and probation for two years.

Joseph Lentine, of Bristol, suspended sentence of six months, $100 fine and probation for one year.

Russell McCurdy, of Mt. Holly, N. J., formerly of Bristol, Pa., suspended sentence of six months.

John Stallone, of Bristol, suspended sentence of six months, $1000 fine and probation for one year.

Imposition of jail terms marked a victory over what authorities termed the largest bootlegging conspiracy since repeal. The ring did business in Eastern Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and Delaware.

Others receiving jail terms are: Benjamin Fogel, of Wynfield, reputed brains of the conspiracy, $10,000 fine and 18 months imprisonment. Fogel was charged with operating the conspiracy from three headquarters located in West Philadelphia hotels.

Eugene Alligrucci, of Scranton, one year and a day and $1,500 fine; Benny Carafa, Chester, $1,000 fine and four months; Daniel Cook, Philadelphia, $1,500 fine and six months; Charles Butler, Salisbury, Md., one day; Eli Green, Philadelphia, $750 fine and four months; Arthur Hector, Philadelphia, four months; Joseph Gansky, Philadelphia, $750 fine and four months; Jacob Levin, John Smith and Edward Kane, all of Philadelphia, four months each, and four months; Emmanuel Pomerantz, Philadelphia, $250 fine and four months.

Fogel, Carafa, Green, Levin, Rush and Smith were given until May 9 to wind up their business affairs before starting their prison terms. Judge Maris ordered them to appear in court again for sentence.

Edward C. Dougherty, supervisor of the U. S. Alcohol Tax Unit, whose agents trapped the gang after three years of work, declared his department was pleased with the sentences.

Among the group of 25 who escaped with suspended sentences and without being fined was Albert Sandler, Philadelphia, the government's star witness. He testified against nearly every one of the 91 defendants and in return for the help he gave in smashing the biggest post-repeal conspiracy ring in this section of the country, he was freed under a two years' suspended sentence and five years' probation.

ROSTAGBOTS IN SILKS

Dictionaries are like watches; the worst is better than none, and the best cannot be expected to be quite true. The redoubtable Samuel Johnson said that, and he knew, for he was no mean dictionary-maker himself.

No lexicographer sits on a throne, wielding a scepter, separating the sheep from the goats, conferring a peerage on this word and shunting that one to the hangman. Words have a way of confounding the dictator, of flowering and perpetuating themselves despite the acids spread upon them by the pedants, of maintaining a true language democracy by virtue of the popular will. The most outrageous expressions find themselves able to edge into the crevices of our speech after having been "shrunk" by usage into the commonest commonplace, to quote this time from Tennyson.

Words are currency, accepted as legal tender by all who know their meaning. Our sages have come to bow to the truth of this; they make a virtue of necessity and smile benignly as they open the doors of the sacred precincts to the quondam roustabouts.

Take such a sentence as this, for example, "Any cabbagehead should know you can't catch the larks by being in cahoot with hoodlums even for a C-note cash on the nail every day because there is always the danger of passing in your cheeks unexpectedly."

A few years ago that would have been in a language foreign to most educated Americans. But our speech is fluid, and today you can translate the sentence by means of the dictionary, such as the new one compiled by Oxford and Chicago university savants who say that not one of the words or phrases is slang any more. Their dictionary defines a cabbagehead as a stupid person, catch the larks means to prosper, in cahoot with means in league with, a C-note is $100, cash on the nail is spot cash, and to pass in your cheeks means to die. Thus language grows and preserves its vitality.

In Harrisburg, east of Pennsylvania, politicians have been added to the payroll so rapidly they have overflowed the State buildings into rented space in 51 other office buildings. This was done to save the State the trouble of making their pay checks to them back home in Carlisle.

The children of Japan like their radio, this thought, "We wish to send love to all our little friends in all parts of the world. We are learning every day, in our schools and in our homes, that the world is getting smaller and that our love for others is getting bigger."

Men should laugh at the hats women wear. For themselves they buy anything that has a band around it if the salesman says it is the latest style.

Retouchers who worked on the radioed photographs of the Vienna triumph made it pretty plain, we thought, what they think of Hitler.

It is no longer a question of having it one way or the other, Mr. Roosevelt, would rather write and be president.

"KICK THE BUCKET"

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — (INS) — The expression "kick the bucket," meaning to die, originated in the lumber camps, claims A. S. Draper, Draper, who spent his youth in the timber camps, says the "tenderfoot" in camp was forced to stand with his back to the wall and jump outward. Then, after a bucket or keg was placed behind him without his knowledge, he was told to jump back and consequently went sprawling across the floor. That was what the lumberjacks called "kicking the bucket."

"Love I Dare Not" by ALLENE CORLISS

CHAPTER XV

Alec stopped and waited expectantly, and when she was silent, he said, "Well, why don't you say something? What do you think of it? Do you like it or don't you?"

Gina was regarding him thoughtfully. She had listened to him, at first incredulously, and then with the growing conviction that if he persisted in writing this play, it would be an utterly disastrous experiment.

Frowning faintly, she said, "Do you really want to know what I think about it?"

"Of course, I've been so anxious for you to get back so I could go over it with you. I was sure you would be as enthusiastic about it as I am. But I can see you're not. I can see you don't like it. Well, why don't you say so? Why don't you say straight out that you don't like it?"

He was angry at her now. He stared at her, his cheeks flushed, his eyes accusing.

"It isn't so much that I don't like the idea of the play," said Gina slowly, "I do. That is, I like it for someone else. For Sharpe Bennett, for instance, or possibly Larry. But not for you, Alec."

"I know. You think because I have never done anything but brittle, sophisticated comedies that I can't do a tender, delicate play like this. Well, O.K. You think I'll make a flop of it, don't you?"

"I don't know. It certainly is completely removed from anything you've ever done. And it does seem as if it would be a little hazardous to risk making such an utter change. After all, you've accustomed your public to expect one type of play from you—how do you know they will like having something entirely different shoved at them?"

"Now you're talking like Bernstein. And I don't give a damn for my public."

"In that case?" Gina shrugged delicately.

"All right. I do give a damn for them. But if it's good, they'll take it and like it. You know that. But what you really think is that it won't be good. That is what you think, isn't it, Gina?"

"I don't know. I tell you, I say that I think it is risky. On the other hand, perhaps you can do it."

"But you don't really believe I can."

She thought, "We are quarreling, and I don't want to quarrel with him. Not today. Not about this play or anything else."

She said aloud, "I didn't say that. Perhaps you can, Alec. You probably can. And it's a lovely idea. I'm crazy about the idea. But let's not talk about it any more now. If we do, we're sure to get angry and I don't want to get angry."

"Very well," Alec grinned amiably. "I don't want to either. To hell with the play. Let's talk about something else."

"Yes, let's talk about Tommy. I haven't seen him yet. Has he changed any? Is he happy to be back?"

"The answer," said Alec, "seems to be yes and no to both those questions. He hasn't changed in some ways and he has in others. He's glad to be back, I think, but restless as the devil. I'm anxious to see what you make of him, Gina. Frankly, he's got me puzzled."

"What do you mean, exactly?"

"Well, he needs a good long vacation but he's already talking about getting back to work. And this morning he said something about moving into a place of his own, says he can't live on me all winter."

"Well, you can understand that. After all, he isn't a schoolboy any more. You can't blame him for wanting to be on his own."

"I know. But he's changed in other ways, Gina. He's harder. Harder to get at, if you see what I mean. You know how close we always were. . . well, something's happened to that old, easy relationship. He holds off, somehow. . . not as if he wanted to, exactly, but as if he couldn't help it."

"Well," Gina said again, reassuringly, "he's been away three years. Give him a little time. I can't believe he's really any different, but there's bound to have to be certain readjustments after any separation."

Alec grinned. "All right, I'll stop worrying about it. But there's one other thing," he added, more seriously, "He doesn't like Caroline."

"For heaven's sake, why not?" Gina's voice was mildly incredulous. "I can't imagine. Probably because I hoped he would. It usually works out like that, you know."

"Yes. But how do you know?"

"Well, it's pretty obvious. He took her dancing one afternoon and dropped it there. Hasn't even called her up since. Whenever I suggest he join us, he has something else to do. Flurs it out for yourself, darling. . . but it's awkward."

"Now that I stop to think of it," admitted Gina, "Caroline did act queer about him. When I mentioned him, I mean. She didn't say much. Just that yes, she had met him, and that was about all. I remember thinking that it was odd she wasn't more enthusiastic, but she's a strange child, more interested in her work than in any man."

"Yes," said Alec. "I wish to God, she wasn't."

"But I thought," Gina was smiling at him lazily, "that you were glad she wasn't involved romantically. I mean, I remember quite distinctly your telling me that you wouldn't have bothered with her at all if she had been."

"That," said Alec, speaking distinctly, his eyes on the fire, "was eight weeks ago. I wasn't in love with her then. I am now."

The room was very still. Gina continued to sit with her head pressed back against the faded linen of the sofa. Only her hands moved. They were pressed down hard at her sides now and she had taken her feet off the footstool, so that all of her fell in straight lines. Her arms fell straight down at her sides, the black velvet of her frock falling in straight lines from her knees to her slim ankles.

She said, deliberately keeping the corners of her mouth turned up in that quiet, half humorous little smile, "I didn't know, Alec—and yet in a way I suppose I did."

It was true. In a way, she had known. Since that first night, really away she had put the knowledge away from her. Had refused to accept it, had deliberately closed her eyes to it. Especially during this time she had been away. He had said, that last night, "There's no reason in the world why we shouldn't take a holiday, together. . . work hard in Pittsburgh, darling, and perhaps when you come back we can manage it. . . ." And she had believed, she had thought. . .

She wrenched her mind away from what she had thought. Whatever it was, she had been wrong. Alec loved Caroline. He had just finished telling her. He had said, "But that was eight weeks ago. I wasn't in love with her then. I am now."

She had to say something. She couldn't just sit here and stare at him with that smile frozen on her lips. She had to say something, and pretend she was glad. Pretend she was happy about it. All the rest of her life she would have to pretend that. She might as well begin.

She said, "Yes, I suppose I did know. And I think it is lovely, Alec. I think it is lovely for both of you."

Alec leaned forward. His eyes were frowning and intent. "You really mean that? You're not just being decent and sweet?"

"But of course I mean it. Why shouldn't I? I adore you both. . . ."

"Never mind that. We know each other too well, darling, to have to dissemble. And we both know you might not have felt like this at all. I'm not fool enough to think that you are any longer in love with me, but you were once, Gina, and most women—"

Gina laughed briefly and stood up. "Well, I'm not most women. You should also know that. . . ."

She walked swiftly over to the window and pulled the curtains together. She stopped by the piano and turned on a pale shaded lamp. She came back to him then, and stood with the freight flowing over her softly, her face completely composed.

But she was not quite prepared for what happened next.

Alec stood up and came close to her and put his hands lightly on her shoulders. It was an old and tender gesture. Once he would have followed it by his bending his head and kissing her on the mouth.

But today he simply smiled down at her and said, "I do know that. I also know that you are a completely charming and lovely person."

She felt her shoulders tremble beneath the touch of his hands and she laughed and moved away from him. "I'm not, of course. But it is pleasant to hear you say so quietly, like that, as if you really meant it."

"I do mean it. But you know that. You know how I feel about you, Gina."

"Yes," said Gina, and then because she did know exactly how he felt about her and that it was not at all the way that she felt about him, she said, "That must be Caroline, now," and was relieved when the door opened and it was.

Because anything, even Caroline's coming in, looking very young and wind-blown, was better than being left alone any longer with Alec.

OPERATING COST

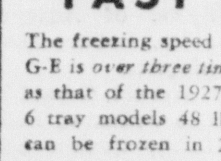

The first G-E Monitor Mechanism revolutionized refrigeration costs. Today this famous Thrift Unit uses an average of 60% less current than the original.

COLD CAPACITY

More cold producing capacity with less current consumption has resulted from G-E's research. Since 1927 the cold capacity of the famous General Electric mechanism has been increased 36%.

FAST FREEZING

The freezing speed of today's G-E is over three times as fast as that of the 1927 G-E. In 6 tray models 48 lbs. of ice can be frozen in 24 hours.

QUIET

You can scarcely hear the murmur of today's G-E Monitor Mechanism. Since the first "quiet" G-E, acoustic mufflers, "floating power" and forced-lubrication have reduced operating noise 78%. And also added to the long life of a General Electric!

the group that the new street in the old canal basin is being rapidly finished and that several lights have been installed. He pointed out that with this new street the parking problem on Mill street will be partially solved. There is room in the basin for a considerable number of automobiles. It was pointed out, also, that access to this new parking spot could be had by three streets, namely, Pond, Wood and Cedar.

George Dougherty, Bristol Recreation Football Club official, spoke briefly on the possibilities of having a community center sponsored for Bristol. He said that such a center would include a gymnasium and an enclosed athletic field. He pointed out that government funds, through the Federal Housing Administration, could be gotten to aid in the erection of such a building. Interest was taken by the group in what Mr. Dougherty had to say.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Like all the other tailored clothes this season the slacks suit has gone sissy. Time was when it was as severe as any man's business suit, but that's all over now. The slacks themselves have really changed little, but the "go-withers" are new and appealing. Boleros, Eton jackets, mess-jackets and waistcoats appear with slacks as well as brilliant sashes, gaily embroidered suspenders, brightly printed blouses, huaraches, multi-colored sandals, sombreros and gadgetry jewelry.

With very wide-legged slacks of the sheer wool crepe pretty Penny Singleton goes completely Mexican. To a short-sleeved matching skirt she adds a pottery blue wool jersey bolero and pirate sash. Her felt hat matching blue is the sombrero type and just to carry the "over-the-border" theme a step farther it is banded with a row of bright silvery discs. Ann Sheridan also carries out the Mexican motif in a slacks outfit by coupling white flannel "trous" with a heavy white crepe blouse, square-necked, short-sleeved and embroidered in the pure rich colors the peons adore.

Isabel Jeans wears a plaid tweed Eton jacket with tan slacks which are held up by a belt made of the tweed. Jane Wyman likes wide-ribbed white pique mess jacket and flat sandals with navy flannel slacks while a blue checked tablecloth linen waistcoat is stunning with Susan Hayward's pearl-button trimmed medium blue slacks.

While the peasant influence is still being felt in frocks many members of the smartly dressed younger set put it to the tune of slacks. Jane Bryan attaches "H" shaped suspenders to slacks of bottle green flannel, has the straps richly embroidered in flowers and wears the combination with a coarse linen peasant blouse which has full elbow-length sleeves. The scarf which she ties under her chin is also linen but has a border embroidered in the same colors as the suspenders.

There were some "sissy" blouses last year in Hollywood but this spring the Hollywood girls have definitely taken them to their hearts. They like them best in mad cotton prints patterned with high round necklines, zippered front openings and wide short sleeves. Frequently they wear leather bracelets or straps to match the colorful composition blouse slide opener.

Slack shoes are one of the major thrills of this season. Whether the soles be hemp rope, cork or crepe rubber, the sandals are interesting because the tops are bound to striped, dotted or figured fabrics in colors that deliberately clash. Although the most conservative girls select oxfords they still can't resist having a fling at the bright leathers, dyed blue, red or green.

DETROIT—(INS)—If fortune teller, Mrs. W. H. Cherry, 31, could have foretold her own fortune, she would have foreseen that she was to be arrested for filing three letters from a mail box while out canvassing for customers.

The Great Game of Politics

almost exclusively with New Deal furniture. In both the 1934 and the 1936 primaries such a thing as an anti-New Deal candidate for a Democratic Senatorial or House nomination was almost unknown. It is true that in 1936 Colonel Henry Breckinridge led a forlorn anti-Roosevelt primary fight in a number of States as a Presidential candidate, but he did not get a single delegate and no support from any aspirant for Senate or House. On the contrary, in 1934 and 1936, there was general acceptance by all such aspirants that success was possible, in either primary or general election, only by riding on the Roosevelt coat-tails. And ride they did.

THE contrast today is striking. Not only in a number of States and districts are there Democratic candidates openly anti-New Deal, but in some—for example, Senator Bennett Clark in Missouri—they are unopposed, not because the Administration would not like to bring about their defeat but because it has been unable to find an effective candidate with a chance of success. States—Kentucky is one—the Administration candidate has been challenged and there is in progress a bitter fight in which the President, through White House endorsement, is directly involved. In Georgia, where Senator Walter George is on the White House black list, the Administration forces are known to be anxious to push Governor Rivers into the field.

IN South Carolina they are backing a strong New Dealer against Senator Ellison D. Smith, whose anti-New Dealism has earned him White House enmity. In Maryland they have not yet found a candidate to enter against Senator Tydings, one of the anti-court-packing Senators, who also voted against the reorganization bill and in other ways has failed to endear himself to the President—but that they would like to see him "knocked off" in the primaries and are still hoping he will be in common knowledge. What all this adds up to is a revolt against the Administration and a rift in the Democratic party, certain to be reflected in the primary results this year, in the Congress next year and in the primaries and convention the year after. Rifts caused by revolts against second-term Presidents do not narrow with time—they widen and deepen.

THIS ONE is sufficiently deep already to have brought the third-term propaganda to a complete stop. It isn't likely it can be revived without being ridiculous. Everybody will concede that the basic essential for a third nomination is that the second-term President be drafted by a united party. The present situation clearly precludes any such possibility. The only open question is whether Mr. Roosevelt will have sufficient strength left in 1940 to nominate the party candidate, or whether the convention will be controlled by the anti-New Deal Democrats. We will know more about that after September, when the primaries are over.

ROUSTABOUTS IN SILKS

Dictionaries are like watches; the worst is better than none, and the best cannot be expected to be quite true. The redoubtable Samuel Johnson said that, and he knew, for he was no mean dictionary-maker himself.

No lexicographer sits on a throne, wielding a scepter, separating the sheep from the goats, conferring a peerage on this word and shunting that one to the hangman. Words have a way of confounding the dictator, of flowering and perpetuating themselves despite the acids spread upon them by the pedants, of maintaining a true language democracy by virtue of the popular will. The most outrageous expressions find themselves able to edge into the crevices of our speech after having been "shrunk" by usage into the commonest commonplace, to quote this time from Tennyson.

Words are currency, accepted as legal tender by all who know their meaning. Our sages have come to low to the truth of this; they make a virtue of necessity and smile benignly as they open the doors of the sacred precincts to the quondam roustabouts.

Take such a sentence as this, for example, "Any cabbagehead should know you can't catch the larks by being in cahoot with hoodlums even for a C-note cash on the nail every day because there is always the danger of passing in your cheeks unexpectedly."

A few years ago that would have been in a language foreign to most educated Americans. But our speech is fluid, and today you can translate the sentence by means of the dictionary, such as the new one compiled by Oxford and Chicago university savants who say that not one of the words or phrases is slang any more. Their dictionary defines a cabbagehead as a stupid person, catch the larks means to prosper, in cahoot with means in league with, a C-note is $100, cash on the nail is spot cash, and to pass in your cheeks means to die. Thus language grows and preserves its virility.

"KICK THE BUCKET"

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — (INS) — The expression "kick the bucket," meaning to die, originated in the lumber camps, claims A. S. Draper, Draper, who spent his youth in the timber camps, says the "lenderfoot" in camp was forced to stand with his back to the wall and jump outward. Then, after a bucket or keg was placed behind him without his knowledge, he was told to jump back and consequently went sprawling across the floor. That was what the lumberjacks called "kicking the bucket."

"Love I Dare Not" by ALLENE CORLISS

CHAPTER XV

Alec stopped and waited expectantly, and when she was silent, he said, "Well, why don't you say something? What do you think of it? Do you like it or don't you?"

Gina was regarding him thoughtfully. She had listened to him, at first incredulously, and then with the growing conviction that if he persisted in writing this play, it would be an utterly disastrous experiment.

Frowning faintly, she said, "Do you really want to know what I think about it?"

"Of course. I've been so anxious for you to get back so I could go over it with you. I was sure you would be as enthusiastic about it as I am. But I can see you're not. I can see you don't like it. Well, why don't you say so? Why don't you say straight out that you don't like it?"

He was angry at her now. His stare at her, his cheeks flushed, his eyes accusing.

"It isn't so much that I don't like the idea of the play," said Gina slowly. "I do. That is, I like it for someone else. For Shane Benedict, for instance, or possibly Larry. But not for you, Alec."

"I know. You think because I have never done anything but brittle, sophisticated comedies that I can't do a tender, delicate play like THE APPLE ORCHARD. You think I'll make a flop of it, don't you?"

"I don't know. It certainly is completely removed from anything you've ever done. And it does seem as if it would be a little hazardous to risk making such an utter change. After all, you've accustomed your public to expect one type of play from you—how do you know they will like having something entirely different shoved at them?"

"Now you're talking like Bernstein. And I don't give a damn for my public."

"In that case?" Gina shrugged delicately.

All right. I do give a damn for them. But if it's good, they'll take it and like it. You know that. But what you really think is that it won't be good. That is what you think, isn't it, Gina?"

"I don't know. I tell you. I say that I think it is risky. On the other hand, perhaps you can do it."

"But you don't really believe I can."

She thought, "We are quarreling, and I don't want to quarrel with him. Not today. Not about this play or anything else."

She said aloud, "I didn't say that. Perhaps you can. Alec. You probably can. And it's a lovely idea. I'm crazy about the idea. But let's not talk about it any more now. If we do, we're sure to get angry and I don't want to get angry."

"Very well," Alec grinned amiably. "I don't want to either. To hell with the play. Let's talk about something else."

"Yes, let's talk about Tommy. I haven't seen him yet. Has he changed any?" Is he happy to be back?

to be back, I think, but restless as the devil. I'm anxious to see what you make of him, Gina. Frankly, he's got me puzzled."

"What do you mean, exactly?"

"Well, he needs a good long vacation but he's already talking about getting back to work. And this morning he said something about moving into a place of his own, says he can't live on me all winter."

"Well, you can understand that. After all, he isn't a schoolboy any more. You can't blame him for wanting to be on his own."

"I know. But he's changed in other ways, Gina. He's harder. Harder to get at, if you see what I mean. You know how close we always were. . . well, something's happened to that old, easy relationship. He holds off, somehow. . . not as if he wanted to, exactly, but as if he couldn't help it."

"Well," Gina said again, reassuringly, "he's been away three years. Give him a little time. I can't believe he's really any different, but there's bound to have to be certain readjustments after any separation."

Alec grinned. "All right, I'll stop worrying about it. But there's one other thing," he added, more seriously. "He doesn't like Caroline."

"For heaven's sake, why not?" Gina's voice was mildly incredulous. "I can't imagine. Probably because I hoped he would. It usually works out like that, you know."

"Yes. But how do you know?"

"Well, it's pretty obvious. He took her dancing one afternoon and dropped it there. Hasn't even called to join us, he has something else to do. Figure it out for yourself, darling, but it's awkward."

"Now that I stop to think of it," admitted Gina, "Caroline did act queer about him. When I mentioned him, I mean. She didn't say much. Just that yes, she had met him, and that was about all. I remember thinking that it was odd she wasn't more enthusiastic, but she's a strange child, more interested in her work than in any man."

"Yes," said Alec. "I wish to God, she wasn't."

"But I thought," Gina was smiling at him faintly, "that you were glad she wasn't involved emotionally. I mean, I remember quite distinctly your telling me that you wouldn't have bothered with her at all if she had been."

"That," said Alec, speaking distinctly, his eyes on the fire, "was eight weeks ago. I wasn't in love with her then. I am now."

The room was very still. Gina continued to sit with her head pressed back against the faded linen of the sofa. Only her hands moved. They were pressed down hard at her sides now and she had taken her feet off the footstool, so that all of her fell in straight lines. Her arms falling straight down at her sides, the black velvet of her frock falling in straight lines from her knees to her slim ankles.

She said, deliberately keeping the corners of her mouth turned up in that quiet, half-humorous little smile, "I didn't know, Alec—and yet in a way I suppose I did."

It was true. In a way, she had known. Since that first night, really

. . . but she had put the knowledge away from her. Had refused to accept it, had deliberately closed her eyes to it. Especially during this time she had been away. He had said, that last night, "There's no reason in the world why we shouldn't take a holiday, together . . . work hard in Pittsburgh, darling, and perhaps when you come back we can manage it. . . ." And she had believed, she had thought. . .

She wrenched her mind away from what she had thought. Whatever it was, she had been wrong. Alec loved Caroline. He had just finished telling her. He had said, "But that was eight weeks ago. I wasn't in love with her then. I am now."

She had to say something. She couldn't just sit here and stare at him with that smile frozen on her lips. She had to say something, and pretend she was glad. Pretend she was happy about it. All the rest of her life she would have to pretend that. She might as well begin.

She said, "Yes, I suppose I did know. And I think it is lovely, Alec. I think it is lovely for both of you."

Alec leaned forward. His eyes were frowning and intent. "You really mean that? You're not just being decent and sweet?"

"But of course I mean it. Why shouldn't I? I adore you both. . . ."

"Never mind that. We know each other too well, darling, to have to dissemble. And we both know you might not have felt like this at all. I'm not fool enough to think that you are any longer in love with me, but you were once, Gina, and most women—"

Gina laughed briefly and stood up. "Well, I'm not most women. You should also know that."

She walked swiftly over to the window and pulled the curtains together. She stopped by the piano and turned on a pale shaded lamp. She came back to him then, and stood with the freelight flowing over her softly, her face completely composed.

But she was not quite prepared for what happened next.

Alec stood up and came close to her and put his hands lightly on her shoulders. It was an old and tender gesture. Once he would have followed it by his bending his head and kissing her on the mouth.

But today he simply smiled down at her and said, "I do know that. I also know that you are a completely charming and lovely person."

She felt her shoulders tremble beneath the touch of his hands and she laughed and moved away from him. "I'm not, of course. But it is pleasant to hear you say so quietly, like that, as if you really meant it."

"I do mean it. But you know that. You know how I feel about you, Gina."

"Yes," said Gina, and then because she did know exactly how he felt about her and that it was not at all the way she felt about him, she said, "That must be Caroline, now," and was relieved when the door opened and it was.

Because anything, even Caroline's coming in, looking very young and wind-blown, was better than being left alone any longer with Alec.

the group that the new street in the old canal basin is being rapidly finished and that several lights have been installed. He pointed out that with this new street the parking problem on Mill street will be partially solved. There is room in the basin for a considerable number of automobiles. It was pointed out, also, that access to this new fine parking spot could be had by three streets, namely, Pond, Wood and Cedar.

George Dougherty, Bristol Recreation Football Club official, spoke briefly on the possibilities of having a community center sponsored for Bristol. He said that such a center would include a gymnasium and an enclosed athletic field. He pointed out that government funds, through the Federal Housing Administration, could be gotten to aid in the erection of such a building. Interest was taken by the

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Like all the other tailored clothes this season the slack suit has gone sissy. Time was when it was as severe as any man's business suit, but that's all over now. The slacks themselves have really changed little, but the "go-withers" are new and appealing. Boleros, Eton jackets, mess-jackets and waistcoats appear with slacks as well as brilliant sashes, gaily embroidered suspenders, brightly printed blouses, huaraches, multi-colored sandals, sombreros and gadgetry jewelry.

With very wide-legged slacks of sheer wool crepe pretty Penny Singleton goes completely Mexican. To a short-sleeved matching shirt she adds a pottery blue wool jersey bolero and pirate sash. Her felt hat matching blue is the sombrero type and just a step farther it is banded with a row of bright silvery discs. Ann Sheridan also carries out the Mexican motif in a slack outfit by coupling white flannel "trou" with a heavy white crepe blouse, square-necked, short-sleeved and embroidered in the pure rich colors the peons adore.

Isabel Jeans wears a plaid tweed Eton jacket with tan slacks which are held up by a belt made of the tweed. Jane Wyman likes wide-ribbed white pique mess jacket and flat sandals with navy flannel slacks while a blue checked tablecloth linen waistcoat is stunning with Susan Hayward's pearl-button trimmed medium blue slacks.

While the peasant influence is still being felt in frocks many members of the smartly dressed younger set put it to the tune of slacks. Jane Bryan attaches "H" shaped suspenders to slacks of bottle green flannel, has the straps richly embroidered in flowers and wears the combination with a coarse linen peasant blouse which has full elbow-length sleeves. The scarf which she ties under her chin is also linen but has a border embroidered in the same colors as the suspenders.

There were some "sissy" blouses last year in Hollywood but this spring the Hollywood girls have definitely taken them to their hearts. They like them best in mad cotton prints patterned with high round necklines, zippered front openings and wide short sleeves. Frequently they wear leather bracelets or straps to match the colorful composition blouse slide opener.

Slack shoes are one of the major thrills of this season. Whether the soles be hemp rope, cork or crepe rubber, the sandals are interesting because the tops are bound to striped, dotted or figured fabrics in colors that deliberately clash. Although the most conservative girls select oxfords they still can't resist having a fling at the bright leathers, dyed blue, red or green.

DETROIT—(INS)—If fortune teller, Mrs. W. H. Cherry, 31, could have foretold her own fortune, she would have foreseen that she was to be arrested for filing three letters from a mail box while out canvassing for customers.

almost exclusively with New Deal furniture. In both the 1934 and the 1936 primaries such a thing as an anti-New Deal candidate for a Democratic Senatorial or House nomination was almost unknown. It is true that in 1936 Colonel Henry Breckinridge led a forlorn anti-Roosevelt primary fight in a number of States as a Presidential candidate, but he did not get a single delegate and no support from any aspirant for Senate or House. On the contrary, in 1934 and 1936, there was general acceptance by all such aspirants that success was possible, in either primary or general election, only by riding on the Roosevelt coat-tails. And ride they did.

THE contrast today is striking. Not only in a number of States and districts are there Democratic candidates openly anti-New Deal, but in some—for example, Senator Bennett Clark in Missouri—they are unopposed, not because the Administration would not like to bring about their defeat but because it has been unable to find an effective candidate with a chance of success. In a number of other States—Kentucky is one—the Administration candidate has been challenged and there is in progress a bitter fight in which the President is directly involved. In Georgia, where Senator Walter George is on the White House black list, the Administration forces are known to be anxious to push Governor Rivers into the field.

IN South Carolina they are backing a strong New Dealer against Senator Ellison D. Smith, whose anti-New Dealism has earned him White House enmity. In Maryland they have not yet found a candidate to enter against Senator Tydings, one of the anti-court-packing Senators, who also voted against the reorganization bill and in other ways has failed to endear himself to the President—but that they would like to see him "knocked off" in the primaries and are still hoping he will be common knowledge. What all this adds up to is a revolt against the Administration and a rift in the Democratic party, certain to be reflected in the primary results this year, in the Congress next year and in the primaries and convention the year after. Rifts caused by revolts against second-term Presidents do not narrow with time—they widen and deepen.

THIS ONE is sufficiently deep already to have brought the third-term propaganda to a complete stop. It isn't likely it can be revived without being ridiculous. Everybody will concede that the basic essential for a third nomination is that the second-term President be drafted by a united party. The present situation clearly precludes any such possibility. The only open question is whether Mr. Roosevelt will have sufficient strength left in 1940 to nominate the party candidate, or whether the convention will be controlled by the anti-New Deal Democrats. We will know more about that after September, when the primaries are over.

ning for jobs goes back to the mustache-cup era he qualifies for a conspicuous place in any museum of political antiques. But as the hope of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania he doesn't get to first base.

Even if Pinchot were to win, his victory would be ashes in the mouth of every Republican, and of every Pennsylvanian regardless of party, who is sick and tired of Democratic misrule at Harrisburg. Four more years of Pinchot would be as bad as four more years of Earle.

Republican Pennsylvania wants no more of the stale Pinchot brand of political expediency. It wants to win at the coming election for the well-being of all Pennsylvanians. It wants to win with a real winner, Arthur James.

Judge James is able and willing to pitch in with both hands to clear up the wreckage left at Harrisburg by the Democratic tax-gougers. Vigorous, straight-shooting, alert to the manifold problems of today and capable of solving them in practical fashion, he is the man Pennsylvania should have in the Governor's chair during the coming four years.

He is everything that Pinchot is not. He is a man whom the people of Pennsylvania, all the people, can depend upon to do a 24-hour-a-day job in their interests, unswayed by partisanship or prejudice. He is the man the Democratic leadership is afraid of because they know that as the nominee for Governor he would be the hardest man for the Democrats to beat.

Judge James is the people's candidate; and the people will prove their trust in him by the votes for James and against Pinchot on primary day.

KNOW YOUR STATE

Controlling Floods

(Prepared for The Courier by F. A. Pirkin, Executive Director, Pennsylvania State Planning Board)

Floods are normal functions of the drainage systems. Stream channels become partially filled with silt, gravel and debris washed from the land. During normal flows the stream is unable to clear itself of this debris, and its capacity becomes less each day. Flood flows remove much of this debris—some of it is carried beyond the mouth of the stream and some deposited on the floor plain—and restore the normal capacity to the stream.

All this must be taken into consideration when measures for protecting property from floods are being planned. Dykes and levees constructed along a river prevent the deposition of this material on the flood plains. The result is that it remains in the stream channel and the capacity of the channel is reduced. The levees must then be progressively heightened to remain effective, unless the amount of silt washed into the streams is materially reduced through improved land use practices controlling erosion.

Dykes and levees do provide local protection and their value was well proven in the January 1937 floods when the high waters which rushed down the Ohio River, leaving death and disaster in their wake, were unable to break down or go over the billion dollar levee system along the lower reaches of the Mississippi. The cost of such works is high, however, and they can be used only for local protection on streams of low or moderate velocity.

Deepening the channel and removing encroachments will tend to accelerate the water flow, thus speeding it past a city and reducing the flood height. Its chief fault lies in the fact that it often results in increasing the flood heights at points farther down the stream.

Then, again, the removal of encroachments or obstructions may produce undesirable results since it increases the stream's velocity. So long as the velocity of the stream is kept below a certain amount, the flood cannot carry buildings, houses, bridges, etc., along with it, but a slight increase in the velocity of the stream will tremendously increase its carrying power, resulting in increased damage. It is often the velocity rather than the height of flood waters which causes the destruction of property.

At the present time there are many structures located on the flood plains which could have been built on higher ground without causing inconvenience to the owners. Some of the owners of these structures were ignorant of the flood danger when they built; others, being good business men, were willing to assume the risk in order to get sites at lower prices than they would pay for sites outside the danger zone. Still other structures, such as railroads, highways, and water-using industries were forced to build on the flood plains because other suitable sites were not available. However, flood control and protection works protect only a portion of the population—chiefly those who by ignorance or choice located on the flood plains. The greater portion of the cost of proposed works will be paid by those who located their structures outside of the flood danger zone.

There are, however, certain areas where industrial and cultural developments on the flood plains have reached such proportions that it is both economical and rational to construct flood protection or flood control works. Pittsburgh is one outstanding example of this type.

Flood control and protection for certain communities may be justified on purely economic grounds. In some communities, particularly in those of intense industrial development, flood control and protection may be justified on other grounds as well. The recurrence of a flood similar to that of 1936 may figuratively wash many of Pennsylvania's industries into other states. The erection of structures for flood control and protection for certain communities will not only protect the investments in industrial, governmental and private property, but will also go far toward keeping these industries within Pennsylvania.

For the sake of economy in both operation and construction, all flood control and protection works should be co-ordinated into a comprehensive plan. The drainage basin is the logical unit for such planning.

An owner of a building located on a flood plain may know of the flood danger and yet be willing to assume the risk so far as his own property is concerned. However, a flood might destroy his building and carry the wreckage against a bridge, forming an obstruction to water flow. Such an obstruction will result in the flooding of additional areas, with resulting additional damages, and perhaps in the destruction of the bridge. During flood periods, each structure on the flood plain becomes a menace.

the wreckage from a single structure may cause millions of dollars worth of flood damages. Oil and gasoline tanks carried down stream create grave fire hazards, while every large timber acts as a battering ram capable of producing great property damage.

Next week's column will deal with existing works in Pennsylvania for the prevention of damage by floods.

RECIPES

Food Growers

Growing the family food is important, maintains an authority on agriculture, who is active in directing the Farm Security Administration of New York State. In a group of families selected at random in Ulster, Sullivan and Dutchess counties, in New York State, foodstuffs saved for winter were estimated to be worth $2,467. Fifteen other families in Rockland, Orange and Westchester counties saved food valued at $1,157.

Cabobs in Society

No longer do the Girl Scouts have a corner on beef cabobs, according to reports from trusty spies. City dwellers who are fortunate enough to own a fireplace sometimes lay in a stock of steaks and bacon for an informal Sunday evening or midnight feast.

Or a tender cabob may be produced right out of the oven grill, by using this method: Alternate squares of steak, bacon and tomato quarters on steel skewers. Broil and season. Some fasteners like to include slices of onion, or rub the steak first with a garlic bud if that flavor is popular.

Note of Cheer

Experts declare that the current food index is lower than it has been since 1925 and that less money is required now to fill the housewife's market basket than for many months. In line with dropping costs in butter, eggs and vegetables, meat prices today are more reasonable than they have been in months, a new incentive to the homemaker who must watch her budget closely.

Baked Salt Mackerel

Soak mackerel overnight. Drain.

BRISTOL

"Mama Runs Wild," Republic comedy which opens tonight at the Bristol Theatre is one of the year's most hilarious comedies. Mary Boland scores heavily as the politically-minded wife of Ernest Truex, who delivers his best performance to date.

The story is entertaining, and the action is kept at a high pace from start to finish by amusing situations and A-1 dialogue. One scene in particular, where Miss Boland is delivering a radio political speech, has the audience literally rolling in the aisles.

Mrs. Calvin Summers accidentally discovers and aids in the capture of two dangerous bank robbers. Publicity stories resulting from this lead the women of Paradise Park to nominate her for Mayor of the community. Rising up in wrath, the men of the town decide to oppose Mrs. Summers by nominating her husband, Calvin, as their candidate. The Summers' daughter, Edith, sides with the men, because of Paul Fowler, son of the local cocktail-lounge owner, whose establishment Mrs. Summers has singled out as a "den of iniquity" which must be closed.

The climax comes at the grand election, held in the city hall, with Calvin winning hands down—the women deserting Mrs. Summers at the last moment. The final scenes, showing how Mrs. Summers maintains her self-respect in the face of overwhelming defeat, have seldom been equalled for uproarious comedy.

Lynn Roberts, in the role of Edith Summers is a young ingenue, who is certain to go far. Lovely to look at, and with a delightful flair for comedy, this young lady is altogether charming. William Henry, as Paul Fowler, is convincing, and Mex Terhune, playing Applegate, creates plenty of laughs with his dummy, "Elmer." Audiences will want to see more of these two.

"TAXES ARE INDEED VERY HEAVY"

But Franklin Held Our Own Follies Are Burdensome, Too

"Friends and Neighbors," says Father Abraham, "the taxes are indeed very heavy, and if those laid on by the Government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others much more grievous to some of us."

"We are taxed twice as much by our Idleness (and he wasn't talking about unemployment, either), three times as much by our Pride, four times as much by our Folly, and from these taxes the Commissioners cannot ease or deliver us by allowing an Abatement."

The above words were not written about the taxes of 1938.

They were written in 1758—180 years ago—by Benjamin Franklin in his famous Poor Richard's Almanack.

Franklin put his thoughts in the mouth of Father Abraham, described as an old gentleman among a crowd waiting for a public auction to open. Talk got around to taxes and the sad state of the Nation and one of the company asks the old man: "Won't these heavy taxes quite ruin the country? How shall we ever be able to pay them? What would you advise us to?"

Whereupon Father Abraham delivers his advice.

Incidentally, "Father Abraham's Sermon" is regarded today as the most famous piece of literature produced in colonial America.

"It would be a hard Government," Father Abraham continues, "that should tax its People one-tenth part of their Time, to be employed in its Service."

Grand Theatre, to prove itself delightful.

Bob Burns, Jack Oakie, Kenny Baker, Milton Berle, Victor Moore, Helen Broderick, Ann Miller, Jane Froman, Buster West and Melissa Mason have the top roles in the picture which ostensibly deals with a huge celebration of the fifth anniversary of Radio City itself.

The real theme of the story, however, is a merry one—the quaint habits of Mr. Burns in composing love-ly songs in his sleep, although even with mail-order lessons from Oakie, his conscious efforts are terrible. On this sprightly basis most of the plot complications are built, and the film weaves them deftly into an entertaining structure. A lighthearted romance between Kenny Baker and Ann Miller and a comedy affair between Burns and Miss Broderick, also add to the story.

Seven sparkling songs, composed by Herb Magidson and Allie Wrubel, are dotted through the picture, with "Take a Tip From the Tail," "Speak Your Heart" and "Good Night, Angel" already among the current popular hits. Ann Miller, who will be remembered for her tap routines in "New Faces of 1937" and "Stage Door," and the noted Broadway dancers, Buster West and Melissa Mason, perform the unusual numbers in the film.

Bob Burns gives one of his finest performances to date as the ambitious Arkansas hill billy, and Oakie, as a broken-down Tin Pan Alley composer, shares top honors with him. Kenny Baker proves to be a hit. Milton Berle as Oakie's loyal pal, Helen Broderick and Victor Moore all are excellent in their respective roles.

Ben Stoll's direction of the production by Edward Kaufman and the singing of Jane Froman and Marilyn Vernon, round out the grand entertainment values of the picture, which belongs on everyone's "must see" list.

Let us then be up and doing, Father Abraham advises, "and dole to the Purpose; so by Diligence shall we do more with less Perplexity."

"Sloth makes all things difficult, but Industry all Things easy," as Poor Richard says. And He that riseth late must trot all Day and shall Scarce overtake his Business at night.

While Laziness travels so slowly that Poverty soon overtakes him, as we read in Poor Richard, who adds: Drive thy Business, let not that drive thee; and Early to Bed, and early to rise, makes a Man healthy, wealthy and wise."

(Note: The Courier is co-operating with the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia in the sponsoring of a students' Benjamin Franklin Essay Contest as an incentive to the young people to study the life of the illustrious American—Benjamin Franklin.)

Four Bristol Men Among 17 Sentenced

In many instances the defendants were unable to pay their fines, and Judge Maris granted them 30 days to a year in which to obtain the money and turn it over to the government. In all of these cases, he made the suspension of all terms contingent upon payment of the fines.

The only exciting incident of the proceeding, aside from the tenacity caused by the severity of some of the sentences was the collapse of Fogel's wife, when he was sentenced. She shrieked and fell into a faint. She was carried to the U. S. Marshal's office and quickly revived.

Assistant U. S. Attorney Gerald A. Gleason made a strenuous appeal to Judge Maris to commit all of the prisoners who had not helped the government in its prosecution to prison terms, asserting that the "purchasers or customers" should get at least four months and fines ranging from $250 up to $1,000; with heavier fines for those who played more important parts in the conspiracy.

He was particularly sarcastic when Fogel made his plea for clemency, declaring "It would be a travesty on justice if this man were allowed to walk out of this court on a suspended sentence."

Fogel, who had pleaded guilty to contend, and thereby virtually admitted his guilt, acted as his own attorney and amazed the crowded court room with the skill he displayed in presenting a plea for mercy, and begging for a suspended sentence.

He told Judge Maris that he had served a 15 months sentence, less time off for good behavior, imposed on him by Judge Welsh in June 1935, and received a suspended sentence from Federal Judge Avis in Camden late in 1936 by convincing that judge he had reformed, and since then, he said he has been "rehabilitating myself, and I promise the court I have not and will not do this again."

"This man was the ringleader of this outfit," Gleason replied, "and it certainly wouldn't be justice nor fair to free him while you send his underlings to jail."

Judge Maris agreed with that point of view, and said that he would give Fogel a partial credit and make his sentence 18 months and $10,000 fine.

Testimony of confessed conspirators at the trial which lasted three weeks showed that thousands of gallons of alcohol made at stills located on farms in Bucks County and Southern Jersey, were distributed to speakeasies, taprooms, and "phony" night clubs, and that the "take" of Fogel's ring, ran into millions of dollars yearly.

Frequently during the trial Gleason remarked that the government had been defrauded of "millions of dollars in taxes," but never mentioned any figure, but officials of the Federal Alcohol Tax Bureau often said the governmental loss was over $20,000,000, which would mean that in the three years the ring operated, it "floats" over 5,000,000 gallons of bootleg alky on the market in competition with legitimate products.

Hopkins Again Man of the Hour

Washington, Apr. 8—Harry L. Hopkins, lean and lanky Works Progress administrator will again emerge as the man of the hour in distributing Federal pump-priming funds, if carefully laid New Deal plans go through. More closely related than appears on the surface of the bitter administration fight to have Congress enact a government re-organization bill and President Roosevelt's projected scheme is the floating of a $1,500,000,000 bond issue, proceeds from which would carry on public works.

It was just three centuries ago today—April 8, 1638—that two score Swedes headed by Peter Minuit, established the first prominent settlement in Wilmington, Delaware, near Philadelphia.

Official business at the state capitol was halted today with hundreds of state workers leaving their desks for the week-end at the close of business yesterday.

15,000 A. F. of L. workers was ordered to march here today as a show of strength in the bitter CIO-A. F. of L. dispute at the giant California-Hawaiian Sugar Refinery. An official order issued jointly by the Central Labor Council and Building Trades Council of Alameda and Contra Costa Counties, instructed all building trade workers to take a one-day holiday from their jobs and march upon Crockett, arriving there by 8 a. m.

The order avowedly was an answer to the appearance here yesterday of 400 CIO water-front workers and warehousemen from San Francisco and other communities, which swung the balance of power in the critical dispute to the side of the CIO.
